Objective

By the end of this video segment, viewers will be able to reflect upon how a health care provider's personal journey can influence, or be influenced by their professional experiences.

Summary

In this segment, Diane Ryan, an RN, describes her personal journey through recurrent ovarian cancer and chemotherapy. She states that her second round of chemotherapy made her very sick and did not work. She explains that she was going to stop treatment, however she was offered a milder regimen that she accepted after considering her young children.

Patients Highlighted

Diane Ryan, young mother, wife, and RN who cares for patients on a hospice unit. She is currently on a third chemotherapy regimen despite her past decision to stop treatment.

Discussion Point

Diane has made it very clear that she is accepting of her own death sometime in the future, but that she wants to be comfortable.

Discussion Question 1

Reflect upon Diane's journey both as a nurse and as a patient. How are her experiences reflected in the decisions she is making in her own cancer battle?

Further Discussion/Points as Needed to Prompt Audience Interaction

Diane is transparent about her level of peace regarding her own possible death, but also her strong desire for comfort at the end of life. Do you think this transparency is helpful or difficult for her husband? Her family? Why or why not?

Discussion Question 2

Do you think that Diane's returning to work is helpful or harmful for maintaining her quality of life?

Further Discussion/Points as Needed to Prompt Audience Interaction

Diane has stated in the past that she loves her job; she has also stated that she has witnessed people with similar diagnoses die from the same illness that she has. What are your thoughts about her return to work?
